He will, if opportunity arise, get into the terrible war game of the nations and bring peace if he can, but he realizes that education must be at the bottom of any insting civilization. He is in thorough sympathy with many other Christian leaders. American Protestants included, that there is something lacking in education that leaves religion out, and that education in secular and religious lines must be for all people.

The new pope is not only against war, but he is against the implements of war as being dangerous in the hands of men seeking opportunities to use them. It is but a few days since Benedict XV has occupied the vation, and fewer still that cardinal ferrata has directed the state affairs of the Catholic church, but already are heard runners of a liberal and progressive policy that touches the life of nations as no policy of any pope ever did.
